

Bernard's Bugbears

Richard Ackland - Gadfly: The Saturday Paper - 20 April 2019

<https://www.thesaturdaypaper.com.au/opinion/diary/2019/04/20/gadfly-bills-joint-adventure/15556824008025>

The O'Regan Arts and Cultural Common Theatre at the Monte Sant' Angelo Mercy College in North Sydney was brimful last Saturday for the launch of Professor Clinton Fernandes's book Island Off the Coast of Asia.

It's an alternative history of Australian foreign policy with special emphasis on how corporations define our "national interest" and influence foreign policy. Woodside and Fishnets Downer immediately spring to mind.

There was rapt attention as lawyer and former ACT attorney-general Bernard Collaery launched the book. Bernard faces charges of conspiracy relating to alleged violations of the Intelligence Services Act over information received by journalists about the bugging of the Timor-Leste cabinet office by the Australian Secret Intelligence Service.

A former ASIS officer known as "Witness K" is the co-defendant in this nasty prosecution, egged on by the attorney-general Christian Porter.

The O'Regan Arts and Cultural Common Theatre was seething with indignation about the whole ghastly abuse of the law. Collaery and K have the status of terrorists and are not allowed to see the brief of evidence, even though the summons was issued in May 2018.

The government wants a Soviet-style secret trial and a Canberra magistrate is yet to decide on that. Collaery said if there is an open trial, there won't be a trial. The last thing the government wants is for K's evidence about the Timor-Leste bugging operation to be made public.

Former diplomat Richard Broinowski told the gathering he knew David Irvine, the head of ASIS at the time of the bugging, from his Foreign Affairs days. He asked the old spy whether he had read Clinton Fernandes's book.

"No, and I don't intend to," came Irvine's reply.

That should be used as an endorsement on the front cover.